John:

1. Judging from the number of suggestions we have received since the decision was made to move the offices of the General Counsel and the Inspector General into the new building, there is a widespread misunderstanding concerning the Polygraph Division space there. At present, we view the locating of the Directorate of Operations element in polygraph space as temporary. Even if it were permanent, this space is only a part of the area on the fourth floor of the north tower assigned to the Office of Security (OS). Congress has not slackened its efforts to have OS beef up its polygraph effort in order to reemphasize the reinvestigation program. Thus, there is considerable soul-searching going on now concerning how best to get this started over the near term in reduced space. Until this issue is sorted out, and barring any further mandated moves emanating from the DCI, the balance of the polygraph space is not on the market.

2. More importantly, we have been operating for some time within a well-advertised policy which dictates that everyone moves to their assigned spaces in the new building now, with attempts to correct dislocations held in abeyance until all moves are complete. This is the only way that the building can be occupied in a reasonable length of time. Other programs are tied directly to the new building move schedule which simply cannot be allowed to slip any further.

25X1 3. I wish that a more positive response were possible, but for the above reasons the polygraph space must remain off the market. Please bear with us through this trying period.
